Vermont will be heard shouting for Hughes at Chicago next month.

The end of Boston's preparedness parade almost saw its beginning in the crooked streets.

It would be a misfortune if Secretary of State Lansing were to resign at the present juncture.

Aside from the unfortunate difference in Washington county, the Republican state convention was pretty nearly of one mind.

Unusual preparations have been made in many cities and towns of Vermont for observance of Memorial day; and as a result of the efforts something of the real old-time significance of the day is likely to be apparent. All that is needed to make the observance completely successful is reasonably good weather.

When the Mexican bandits come out and attack the American troops, the latter make short work of exterminating them or capturing them; but the American troops have great difficulty in locating the bandits on their own initiative. The scouting eyes of the army appear to be of little avail in the wilds of northern Mexico.

A Democratic convention wouldn't be a Democratic convention if it did not take a whack at the Republicans; a Republican convention would not be a Republican convention if it did not jeer at the Democrats; a Progressive convention would be a rare species if it did not thump both the Republicans and the Democrats. Parties live to excoriate each other.

The Times wishes to congratulate the people of Montpelier, and particularly the sponsors of the recent festival of the Montpelier Choral society, for the artistic and, we trust, financial success of their sixth venture in the realm of music. The bringing together of so many musicians of local reputation, together with several well known stars, must have served to help along an appreciation of music in this part of Vermont; and as such it will be turned to the advantage of the communities immediately interested, because the highest in art and music is calculated to have a beneficial influence. Such a festival, accompanied by many rehearsals under a skillful conductor, cannot fail, too, to improve the individual participant's capacity for interpreting the best music. It is likely that the large number of Barre singers who engaged in the chorus received marked benefits along that line, and there is no doubt that they appreciated the opportunities therein afforded.

A few parents in Barre are going to be mourning the death of, or serious injury to, their children if they do not keep those children away from the big automobile trucks which are driven back and forth through the streets of the city. On Wednesday afternoon two heedless little shavers spent some time endeavoring to climb onto motor vehicles as they came along Main street and when they failed to get aboard they turned their attentions to climbing the rear wheels of a large horse-driven wagon, the horses of which were being watered at the trough in the highway and with the driver wholly oblivious to the presence of the youngsters. On Thursday afternoon the same boys, or some just like them, resumed the practice of trying to climb aboard motor trucks; and one of them persisted so much that the driver of the vehicle was forced to stop and drive the little fellow away from the danger. Not all drivers of motor vehicles would be as considerate of the youngsters as this fellow was, and some day, we fear, a little boy will be taken home crushed and mangled because in his exuberance of spirit he found a driver who used all reasonable precautions and yet not enough to protect the youngsters who have thrown all caution to the winds. The middle of the busy street is no place for a six-year-old boy to make his playground; and parents would do well to see that their children keep off the street.

PROGRESSIVES IN RECEPTIVE MOOD.

The members of the Progressive party in Vermont have adopted the same attitude as that of the party in the country at large. It is an attitude of receptivity toward overtures from the Republican party with a view to coalition providing not too many of the so-called Progressive doctrines are to be sacrificed in the union. No hard and fast insistence apparently is made that Theodore Roosevelt shall be the candidate of the prospective coalition if some other candidate can be selected who shall not be hostile to the aims of that same Roosevelt. The resolutions adopted at the state convention in Burlington and the informal addresses at the same time seem to bear out the conviction that the Progressive party is willing to reunite with the Republican party under favorable conditions, such conditions being that the Progressive element must not be entirely submerged. From the standpoint of the Republican party, therefore, the situation is far more satisfactory than it was in 1912 when the party was split asunder by the defection of the Roosevelt element. All the situation needs for the mending of the break is some strong guiding hand and a willingness on the part of both sides to make certain concessions in behalf of peaceful settlement. If the Republican party is to maintain a stiff-necked attitude it cannot expect to receive much help from the still large Progressive faction of the former powerful party; if the Progressive party is to make demands which cannot well be met by the Republicans there will be a division of strength, although not so pronounced as in 1912. Concession on each side will serve to reunite the former party. It remains to be seen whether the intimation of possible peace, as made at the Vermont Progressive convention, is developed along these lines in the nation at large.
